

BERTRAM

The man who designs Bertrams likes to stand up when he puts his pants on. Without cracking his skull. And he likes to get up out of bed. Not crawl out.

All of which was impossible to do in those long low sleek runabouts with cuddly cabins as cozy as a coffin.

So he borrowed a great idea from the VW camper. The pop-up top. And lo and behold, now the world has a long low sleek runabout with 7 foot headroom. Standing up or lying down. Terrific for everyone an inch or more shorter than Wilt the Stilt.

And you can take it with you. A trailerable teepee. A portable pop tent. The first flip-top lid. The hinged hut. The convertible cuddy. The Z, with the V bottom.

There are two Bertrams with the fantastic fold-up focsle, the ultracy Baron Camper (left), and the Moppie Camper. Both have two full bunks, hanging locker and optional galley.

And there's a new conventionally-decked Moppie 24 with a base price under $7,000.

All three have the latest deep-V refinements we worked out from ocean racing. So they zap zestfully across anything with waves, and trail easily behind you across country as well.

They won't drive you to the poorhouse either.

The new Baron and Moppie Camper are available with either 20' or 24' hull. Motor power is sold by Motor dealers. The ultracy Baron with 190 V-6. Most dealers also carry and repair Bertram runabouts from many past up-to-date models.
