

The Taxica

Boats Of The Caribbean.

If you owned an island resort, you'd probably own a Bertram. Or a couple of Bertrams.

Not just as a most stylish limousine to ferry VIPs.

Nor just to whippet out to the fish first.

But because these beautiful brutes of boating can pile up tons of trouble-free mileage taking guests island-hopping or hauling supplies or delivering a doctor in time through just about anything a sea can throw at you.

In the Caribbean, where there are more island resorts and more varying sea conditions per mile than anywhere else, there are more Bertrams than anything else.

The dependably elegant Peter Island Yacht Club in the British Virgins is a case in point. Hard by the capricious Sir Francis Drake Channel, their boats have always been Bertrams. Six in ten years. Four on hand, two sold after seven years of sturdy service. And the owners keep two more further north.

Bertrams earn that kind of loyalty.

There are 18 powerful, swift, strong Bertrams from 28' to 58'. Sportfishermen, flybridge cruisers, convertibles, yachts. Our newest is the 54' Convertible boating writers are raving about.
